

Abstract

The invention relates to a steering device, especially for vehicles, comprising a rotatable steering wheel and a base that cannot be rotated relative to the steering wheel, and means for transmitting data between the steering wheel and the base. The invention is especially characterized in that the means are configured in such a manner that they transmit the data in the form of light signals between the steering wheel and the base in a non-contact manner.